From Mexican Border

Officials of the Postoffice Department were anxiously awaiting this afternoon dispatches from postmasters and postoffice inspectors on the Mexican border informing the department whether or not all the mail routes from the United States to the interior of Mexico had been closed.

Despite the fact that the route through El Paso gateway has been practically closed for some time, the Eagle Pass and Laredo routes, which are always more used than that of El Paso, made the trouble almost inconsiderable. There have been no troubles beyond a few delays resultant from the interruption of traffic on the railways. The press dis-patches of today, however, have made the department officials fearful that mail communication by rail with the interior of Mexico may be broken off

In that case the only way of sending mail would be through Vera Cruz, steamers taking the mails from United steamers taking the malls from United States ports to that point and the railways being relied upon to transport the mails through to their destination. A mail steamer will leave New York for Vera Cruz tonight, and mails that the department had expected to dispatch by rail through Texas may be diverted to Havana and there placed on the steamer.

The House seemed converted into a Sunday school for a few minutes today when Representative Clayton, of Alabama, speaking in favor of the free list bill, reached into his desk and drew forth a Rible, in which he said he had found a passage that applied to the Republican party's treatment of the Amrican laborer. "Of course, you old sinners on the

"I notice that our Speaker isn't present just now—and he is one of the best Bible scholars in the House—so I will read this passage from the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis, in order that you may not dispute my authority. You have a habit of disputing everything unless it agrees with Crouching Between Burdens.

"I find here in the forty-ninth chap-

"This bill is for the purpose of re-dieveling the burden of Federal taxation from the American farmer," continued from the American farmer," continued the Alabama representative, "and, is I believe, consistent with the idea that sufficient taxes can be raised from import duties on articles not mentioned in this bill, from internal revenue taxes and from the taxes required of company. and from the taxes required of compor-

The debate on the farmers' free list bill proceeded in desultory manner in the House this afternoon and there seems to be no prospect of an immediate vote on the measure. Representative Underwood a few days ago expressed the hope that the debate might be closed today, but additional requests for time have come in and the vote may be delayed until the latter part of this week or the first of next.
